1. Insight on Time to Search for Truth.

We are living in an era of ample information flow and can easily access the information we need at any time through the internet. People convey and send their messages in different ways on different platforms. The truth of what is going on is not taught as whole in universities or colleges. College and university graduates need to be skilled and well-rounded individuals as per the needs of the nation and to remain competent enough at the international level.

However, to go beyond what University or college teach is each individual's responsibility to continue searching for the truth and be an agent of that truth to spread it and feed people.

So, while searching for the truth, it is obvious that there is truth and then the opposite of truth. After that, it is the option of individuals to stand with the truth and be an agent of truth in this world for positive contribution to humanity or simply to digest the information or consider the knowledge around you as it is and adjust accordingly and remain in the comfort zone because searching for the truth is also an individual choice.

However, those who search for the truth and are proactive through truth to contribute positively to society always remain part and parcel of mankind history in the list of those contributors throughout human history.

2. Designing reliable strategy

Strategy is an overall plan of what to do step by step to achieve a long-term goal.

I want to share my views on this broad concept and to think and write something about it. I believe that the one who has an applicable and mature strategy that can work effectively, efficiently, and adapt to circumstances an easily.

To design and have a strong strategy, you need to be smart and capable of the following three things:

The first thing is the ability to read, understand, reflect, and be aware of the present context or situation of what is going on around you and how things are related to each other. This will help you to reach a specific and deep understanding of the context.

The second thing is to be good at prioritizing the activities you want to do and what kind of tactics you will use to work on your plan effectively for the sake of achieving your long-term goal. Keeping this in mind, the starting point to design your strategy is to have a clear vision that helps you to derive your strong mission and goals.

The wheel of successful strategy is internalizing the goals you want to achieve, discipline, sacrifice, commitment, dedication, and consistency in your plan activities that you are implementing.

Thirdly, the one who designs a strategy has to anticipate the future and how the activities that are planned in the implementation will show results in the future. This is because, during the design of the strategy, you follow an interconnecting approach of present and future model.

Therefore, a mature strategy is a product of following an interconnecting approach of being able to read and be aware of the present. In order to reach a firm standing on the present and be aware of the future through an anticipation method.

That is used to understand the future and know the effects of the activities that you are doing in the future to achieve an overall goal with full understanding and readiness to use the wheel of successful strategy while you implement your own strategy.

3. Following a busy approach sometimes we need to be in the comfort zone. However, the circumstances always show that there is no room in this world for those who need to be in the comfort zone. Because we always face situations with opportunities and challenges, as well as a future with positive expectations and threats, we need to conduct a SWOT (Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities, and Threats) analysis model at any time. The SWOT analysis model helps you identify your strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and threats. Based on this, the following busy approach suggests the ISIFCDL model, in which there is no break in the world.

I stands for Ideas: Ideas always matter and are crucial to move forward in this world. The following busy approach suggests that individuals have to generate and build their ideas based on truth and things that will solve their problems, progress, and societal development as a whole.

S stands for Strategy: A strong and mature strategy is needed at this stage. Because it helps individuals reach their goals.

I stands for Implementation stage: Effective implementation of the program is required at this stage.

FC stands for Facing Challenges: During the implementation period, individuals experience a lot of challenges. These challenges need to be encountered and the only solution is to face them with courage and wisdom to overcome them.

DR stands for Deriving Lessons: At this stage, we try to capture lessons from all the stages we have passed through for the sake of coming up with new ideas, strategies, implementation tactics, and starting to face new challenges, and so on.

All in all, the intention of the following busy approach model is to be on the right track at any time and be a champion of your self-development as well as to achieve your goal at any time and place.
